Dixie® Insulair® EcoSmart Aroma Insulated Paper Cups

A multi-layered paperboard cup or container designed with a corrugated middle layer of tiny air pockets. This patented design insulates similar to a thermos. Much like the vacuum between the walls of a thermos, the air pockets in the Insulair cup slow down the rate of heat loss, keeping drinks hot longer and hands cooler. Because heat does not flow out quickly, it does not easily enter the container either. For this reason, iced drinks can also be kept cold for longer periods of time. This cup eliminates the need for foam cups, as well as the waste and inconvenience of double cups and cup sleeves. Built-in sleeve eliminates the need for a separate cup sleeve. No foam material, solid paper construction promotes high-quality, eco-friendly image. Triple wall construction. Lid hugs cup brim on inside and outside forming a vacuum.

Can Liner Terms & Definitions

Resin: The raw material from which can liners are made. Consists of three types: Low Density, Linear Low Density and High Density Polyethylene.

Low Density: Used in economical, lower end utility liners.

Linear Low Density: Highly puncture and tear resistant. Use when additional strength and stretch are needed. Ideal for waste with sharp or jagged edges.

High Density: Low cube, lowest cost per bag. Temperature resistant. Available in lower gauges. Ideal for office use.

Gauge: Indicates the thickness of the liner. Low Density liners are generally measured in mils; High Density liners in microns.

Mil to Micron Conversion

It is easy to convert micron to mil. There are 25.4 microns to 1.0 mil. Therefore, use 25.4 as a conversion factor to translate one unit of measure to the other.

1. 25.4 microns = 1.0 mil
2. 0.55 mil x 25.4 = 14 mic
3. 14 mic / 25.4 = .55 mil
